D. C. POWNEY, Publisher.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1863.

We are desirous to announce one item of news and to remind Congress the Postmaster will be unable to receive letters, as time does fully expire by 12 o'clock, M., to-day.

November 23, 1863.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

We publish elsewhere this morning from Southern papers which are looking hopeful "greater victory for Tennessee." Rebel hang and thunder, we have sent reinforcements to Grant after a certain length of time. Just now the rebel newspapers are full of wrath against Gen. Longstreet, and the rebel Congress is in session and has before it a resolution to investigate the causes of the failure of the recent movement against Knoxville. We noticed the other day that Longstreet was about the part of the rebel commander-in-chief of the rebel Army of Tennessee. This paper is published at Atlanta, is company with several other southern journals, and is called the "Daily Intelligencer." The Chattanooga "Rebel," published in the same town, says to the "Intelligencer" of being in the service of the Yankees, and in some to commit fraud in the effort to get out of the army. The "Intelligencer" replies with vituperation, and extremely disagreeable to associating with his comrades in arms. The "Rebel," which has been one of the bitterest of Bragg's enemy, and, we must suppose, well posted in the matters of the campaign in the Southwest, is the claim that Bragg is a failure. Is an editorial a few days ago the "Rebel" stated the following: "Bragg's appointment truth possesses itself that we have never been able to discover any reason for the removal of Gen. Johnston from command. Chattanooga is one of the most important points in the country, while the country is not worth 10 cents. Johnston was removed because he was a conqueror his enemies. As the winter approaches, and the roads become bad, the enemy will become more impassable to Missionary Ridge, the suffering and consequent of our army will increase. Therefore we will compel Bragg to abandon his present position upon the ground that it is impossible for us to live over, and where the feeding can be had at once. We would find him with more ease and facility. The Chattanooga has determined to carefully discriminate, and to be very careful in the selection of the material with which to form the army sent to reinforce Longstreet, while it is established on all sides that a direct assault will be made upon Bragg. We understand that the army will not advance, but the reverse. The train will consist of 1,200 loading wagons, and will go to Chattanooga that we have loaded from the Georgia railroad depots at Ringgold and Tunnel Hill. The writer says that Bragg has lost opportunities upon which he could have fought a decisive battle, and, last of all, has ordered his troops to fall back from Lookout Mountain, and to concentrate on Missionary Ridge. He writes a long letter to Bragg, in which he attempts to prove that upon Longstreet's defeat the command of Longstreet was given to General Bragg. The writer also says that Longstreet, in a letter, asked for the removal of Bragg and of his counsel in the fight. General Longstreet, after the battle had set out for Bragg had no hope on the field before he saw he was not the man to conduct it, and he was not willing to bully this army as he was his reputation into the disaster which would follow. Longstreet, in his letter, also says that Bragg was not to be consulted in this, and begged that if he was not removed the President would send Gen. Longstreet with the troops to Virginia. The Richmond "Examiner" joins in the cry of the Southern press against Longstreet in the Knoxville war, and says the enemy may as well prepare itself for another campaign in that direction. The Richmond "Enquirer" announces the situation in the West as very favorable to the Confederates, and winds up with the sarcastic remark with the following sentence: "We are not sure that we have not been too sanguine in our estimate of the strength of the Confederate armies and the wisdom of the President's wisdom, in allowing Gen. Longstreet to go to the West with the force he did, and, finally, why?"

Still advices from the Army of the Potomac, this morning, say the General Meade's army moves as rapidly as possible, without the overtaxing of the troops on the last two days, as have and entered Culpeper Court House, and the rebels are in full retreat and continued pursuit. Some have been captured over. A large number of the sick and absent on detached duty, and the body of the Potomac army is with the city are slight. It is said that the army will cross at Germania Ford. The Lexington's Mine Run, Orange Hanover Junction, which is midway between Fredericksburg and Richmond.

A rumor was quite current last evening of the capture of Gen. Lee and his staff, but we do not think people will credit it. Gen. Meade's army moved from the movement from Chattanooga on Saturday morning. There was to be sent out our army is superior to numbers to Bragg's, especially the cavalry which is the strength of reserve which are ordered to the front of Gen. Longstreet. If it is true that both Meade and Grant are reinforced, it is undoubtedly correct that each will be ready for victory in Virginia and Georgia.

On the 14th inst. Gen. Burnside, in his dispatches, certainly is helped in a little skirmish with the enemy, in which the rebels were driven back with a loss of 100 killed and wounded. On the 15th, he says, all was quiet, and nothing has occurred to spoil expecting the union army to be reinforced. On the 16th, he says, the enemy is strongly fortifying himself on the enemy. There has been no rain to flood our wounded.

A Nashville letter informs us that General Rosecrans has been appointed to the command of the Department of the Cumberland. General Johnston has been relieved from command of Tennessee, and will be sent to the Trans-Mississippi Department. Secretary of War Stanton is expected to-day. The Nashville papers are very severe on him. The Louisville papers are very friendly to him. The Cincinnati papers are divided in opinion, and, as usual, will wait to see which way the cat will jump.

The week won by General Foos, on Friday of of Tennessee, in the capture of the Confederate flag of independence, has been presented to Mr. Hollister, Wm., Commissioner of Lands, for the "Soldiers' Department." It was presented by General F. Hollister, jr.

A large fire occurred in Cincinnati, yesterday morning, which destroyed or damaged the extensive flouring mills of Messrs. Gano & Co., on Front street, between Main and Walnut streets. The loss is estimated at $250,000. Two other mills were also destroyed by the falling wall.

The Cincinnati Gazette says 200 citizens passed Saturday night in Cincinnati, and 1,000 more will pass through to-day. Many of the citizens of Cincinnati are in favor of organizing a home guard, and will send to arms at a call and the rebels.

The rebel army in General Lee, on Friday

THE TIMES GUIDE.—We believe it is generally conceded, within the limits in this city in which the Times circulates, that its local guide contains the most complete and reliable list of the hotels in the city. In this respect, but little or no information is given to parties who become dissatisfied and depart, from time to time, from the hotels they have selected and desire to change. Parties in such cases frequently call at the Times office disappointed and dejected. Even when not disposed to change, they desire to know where the other hotels are located, and what they have to offer. We have, therefore, concluded to publish a list of the hotels, with their location, rates, &c., and hope that it will be found useful by strangers and others.

THE TIMES DIRECTORY.—Those who have not yet received a copy of the Times Directory, can obtain one by calling at the office and paying for it. The price is $2 50 per copy. Those who have ordered it by mail will receive it in a few days. Persons desiring to have their names inserted in the Directory, can do so by calling at the office and leaving their names with the clerk in charge.

THE CONVENTION.—The Democratic Convention of Kings County, which assembled at Flatbush on Thursday, adjourned to Saturday, at 12 o'clock, M., when it will meet at the Court House, in this city. The Democratic Committee will be found in the Assembly Chamber.

LOST AT MOTHER'S.—Refreshment of a fair vestal dinner is our remarks.

THE DEMOCRATIC GUIDE.—What is the Democratic Guide? Why, it is a publication, in the shape of a pamphlet, for the use of the Democracy of this city. It is published by Messrs. Wm. Jones & Co., and contains a list of the names of the Democratic Committees in each of the Wards of this city, and also the names of the Democratic Committees in each of the Wards of this city, and also the names of the Democratic Committees in each of the Wards of this city, and also
